

Remembering my Son

You left us a few months back,
Finally succumbing to cancers brutal attack.

So much to relish about your life,
Recently married to such an incredible wife.

I was witness to your birth when I cried with Joy
So much excitement over your life, my boy.

And there at the end, when you slipped away, was it tears of relief,
Or simply the start of my everlasting grief.

So many good wishes from friends over the years
and in their words we understood their tears.

Friends and family say thank you for being
You live on in them all, both without seeing.

It helped for a while, to hold-fast on life's course,
But now it is tough to navigate those feelings of remorse

Now as the months move on, as they must
To days of Joy and sadness, your family is thrust.

The memories with time, inevitably, like metal, rust.
Forget, "never", I say to myself, I have to trust

We will all remember your life, such joy not to forget
Hundreds impacted by you, nothing here to regret.

Such pain on your leaving, yet so much joy from your life.
You are at peace but here our sadness is still rife.

I have joy in my heart for your being.
And tears in my eyes for your leaving.

Live on in the bright stars, high above
Fly as high as a bird, and sail on the wings of love.

Let us live as perfectly as you did, good boy
Remembered only, in total joy.
